MANAMA, Bahrain — Iran is taking advantage of a lull in the Gulf fighting to increase oil exports and bolster its economy, Western diplomats said. The Iranians are reported to be exporting more than 2 million barreis a day, up from a range of 1.6 million to 1.8 million barrels a day during the spring. The difference represents an added $20 million a day, or more, in badly needed foreign exchange. In addition, diplomats said

Iraq began the so-called "tanker war" in the spring of 1983 for two reasons, diplomats in the Gulf said. One reason reflected hope that an oil crisis would induce the superpowers to intervene and bring about an end to the Gulf war, which Iraq began in September

The other reason was the great vulnerability of Iran to attacks on oil shipping. Tankers are fran's easly means for sending oil abroad. Iraq, which lost its port at Fao to the Iranians in 1980, is still able to send oil abroad by pipelines through Turkey and Saudi Arabia. "It's clear that the whole tanker war was in Iraq's interest and was kept going by Iraq," a Western dip-

American foreign ministers appear to have failed to make significant progress toward carrying out a regional peace plan after two days of opposition from Honduras, according to diplomate involved in the talks.

In what was intended to be the first formal step toward putting into effect the treaty signed two weeks ago by Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, their foreign ministers agreed on Thursday to little more then a declaration that they had constituted themselves as an executive committee to apply the new plan.

They failed, largely because Honduras, which has been closely allied to the Reagan administration and has provided haven for the Nicaragnan rebels, resisted forming special committees to study methods for accomplishing the goals of the peace plan.

In particular, the commissions are to study how to achieve a cutoff of outside aid, amnesty, negotiations and cease-fires to end guernila wars in the region, according to diplomats involved in the meeting It appears that the decisions of the foreign ministers have to be unanimous in order to be binding.

The foreign ministers said they would meet again in 30 days in Managua and would fly to Venezu-ela over the weekend to ask support for their plan from the Contadora group of nations, as well as the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

The major point of contention at this stage appears to be continued support for the contras by Honduras and the United States. Nicaragua continues to insist that aid to the contras be ended immediately, whereas the Reagan administration is demanding that the rebels be maintained to press the Sandinists to live up to the accord's provisions for political liberalization in Nica-

In their discussions here the foreign ministers of Nicaragua, El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Guatemala appeared to have taken positions that ran contrary to U.S. support for the contras.

Three diplomats taking part in the talks said Costa Rica, Guatemala, and El Salvador at this early stage appear willing to see aid cut off to contra rebels in return for emphasizing political pressure on

Mobile Phones Moving Beyond Life in the Fast Lane

By Robert Reinhold

LOS ANGELES - It is 4:00 P.M. in Southern California and the freeways have become one big moving tele-

Don L. Gevirtz, a business executive, is on the cellular phone in the back seat of his chauffeured Lincoln Continental returning calls during his commute, which takes an hour and a half. "The best place to get me during the day is in the car," he says.

Dr. Mohan Nair, a Torrance psychiatrist, is calling his family for a little self-therapy during a hair-pulling traffic

Last month, Dr. Nair started a rage-therapy program for drivers who have trouble controlling their anger on the clogged freeways. Callers, up to a dozen a day, are advised to keep calm. As for his own emotions, Dr. Nair, a self-professed workaholic who spends much of the time on the road away from his family, says the car phone is soothing, "I rarely see my family during the week," he says. "This helps me feel a lot calmer." In New York, Chicago, Dallas, Houston and every

In just three years since the cellular technology was introduced, the number of subscribers has risen to about 884,000, according to the Cellular Telecommunications

Industry Association. A year ago it was 500,000. Nynex Mobile Communication says it has more than 60,000 subscribers in its New York and New England markets. Every major car rental agency offers the phones now in certain cities.

But by far the largest market is Los Angeles, laced by freeways and made for car phones. There are about 100,000 phones in the area and it seems that almost every Mercedes and BMW displays the little zigzag antenna for the cellular phones. But industry officials say that the device is not just a toy for the rich.

"We are seeing more use by unglamorous people with small businesses," said Reed Royalty, a vice president of PacTel Cellular, which, along with LA Cellular, serves the Los Angeles basin. "The idea that it's only movie stars and their agents is pretty much passe."

Thus, for example, Gary Garrett, a locksmith for 18 years, got tired of having to leave the freeway several times a day to look for a telephone booth. Now he takes and makes calls on the road, sometimes calling customers in their cars, and crossing the city several times in a single Cellular phones took on that name because the service area is divided into cells, each with a low-power radio transmitter. A driver crossing the area is automatically transferred from one transmitter to the next without interruption - usually. Calls, including long distance, may be dialed directly, as from any phone.

It is this system that has propelled the growth in car phones. Without the cells, the old radio phones were

Revised GNP. Price Data Give Mixed Signals

By Anne Swardson

WASHINGTON - The U.S. gross national product grew at an annual rate of 2.3 percent in the second quarter, less than previously estimated, the government said Friday, in one of three reports that gave mixed signals about the U.S.

The government said that U.S. consumer prices rose a scant 0.2 percent in July, the lowest monthly increase so far this year.

It also reported that after-tax profits of U.S. corporations rose 4.2 percent in the second quarter after falling 3.7 percent in the first

The reports had a mixed effect on the markets, which have been looking for signals since the Contmerce Department reported last week that the U.S. trade deficit widened dramatically in June. The dollar slid in Europe and New York in response to the GNP revision. (Page 7.) Prices on the New York Stock Exchange were narrowly higher although the dollar dampened their advance. (Page 8.) The GNP growth figure com-pared with a original estimate of 6 percent. The revision was attributed primarily to the $15.71 billion trade deficit in June. The June trade gap has caused the dollar to fall on world markets. particularly against the yen, since it was reported last week.

And the White House said Friday that data on exports that contributed to the GNP revision had raised doubts about steady improvement in the trade delicit.

The Commerce Department said that the big June gap in merchan-dise trade caused the net exports entry in the GNP calculations to be wered by $5.5 billion.

The lower figure for net exports "does call into question the basic pattern of solid improvement in net exports that had been appearing in earlier estimates," said Leslye Arsht, a deputy White House spokesman. He did not elaborate.

But economists predicted that the trade situation would improve in coming months and that the U.S. economy would continue to grow at a moderate pace.

"People should not regard the downward revision" of secondquarter GNP "as a warning sign that the economy is falling apart. It is not," said Donald Straszheim, chief economist of the New York brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch.

GNP, a measure of the output of the tration's goods and services. grew 4.4 percent in the first quarter, the fastest expansion in almost three years.

Mr. Kovalenko, who was commandant of a prisoner-of-war camp for Japanese captured in the last days of World War IL, is blamed by Japanese officials for promoting a tough and condescending attitude toward Japan.

A Deluge of Sympathy for Crash Survivor

Washington Post Service

ANN ARBOR Michigan -Four-year-old Cecilia Cichan, the sole survivor of the second worst airline disaster in U.S. history, asked for her mother as soon as she regained consciousness and demanded a doll she carried aboard the fatal flight, her grandfather said.

Her parents and brother were among the victims in the crash Aug. 16 of a Northwest Airlines et at Detroit Metropolitan Airport. At least 156 persons died.

On Thursday, nurses brought Cecilia a substitute doll from a room overflowing with teddy bears, balloons, flowers, dolls and other gifts sent her by well-wishers, in an outpouring of sympathy that has reached across the United States and abroad. Later in the day, she underwent four hours of surgery at C.S. Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor. Doctors made several skin grafts on her burned arms and legs and performed other burn care, a hospital spokesman said.

AIDS Tests for Patients Urged at U.S. Hospitals

By Michael Specter

Washington Page Service
WASHINGTON — Federal health officials have issued suidelines that suggest for the first time that hospital patients be tested for the AIDS virus.

The recommendation Thursday the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta departs from its policy of advising against wide-spread AIDS testing in U.S. hospitals. But in releasing new standards for protecting the nation's 6.5 million health care workers from the spread of the HIV virus, the agency noted the need for health care workers to consider all patients as potentially infected with HIV."

Human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, is the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which capples the body's immune system.

This is a compromise really." said Dr. Harold Jaffe, chief of the epidemiology branch of the AIDS program at the Centers for Disease Control. "There is no real data to suggest that testing would increase the safety of health care workers. but the reality is that some AIDS testing has already begun and this document attempts to assure that it will not result in the denial of treatment to those who test positive."

Auxiety about contracting the virus has risen among health care workers since the centers reported in May that three hospital workers had been infected with the AIDS virus after being accidentally splashed with the blood of infected patients. They were the first reported cases of health care workers contracting the virus after a single exposure to blood by a means other than a needle prick.

Last month in Atlanta, the Centers for Disease Control convened a panel of health care experts to to draft the guidelines. The guidelines announced

The rules call for health care workers to treat all blood and bodily fluids as possibly infected. They note that the increasing prevalence of AIDS infection in the U.S. population means increasing risk for health care workers.

■ New Dormancy Estimate Scientists reported Thursday that AIDS appears to lie dormant an average of eight years in adults who are infected by tainted blood and eventually develop the disease, and about two years in very young children thus infected. The Associated Press reported from New

The eight-year estimate, a statistical projection from data on 297 AIDS victims who were infected with the virus from blood or blood products, compares with previous estimates of 4.5 years and 15 years. The study, reported in the British journal Nature, does not necessarily apply to people infected authors said,

Pawned American Honor

A startling historical thunderbolt has just dropped, almost as an afterthought to the Iran-contra investigation: the United States came close to using South Africa as a paymaster for the contra rebels in Nicaragua. Is there no end to the American honor that the Reagan administration is willing to spend in this hapless cause?

The South African initiative took place in 1984, before Congress tightened the Boland restrictions on U.S. help for the contras. The motive, evidently, was to help contras and to develop a working relationship between the CIA and South African operatives, with special regard to Angola. At the time, the CIA was barred by another congressional amendment from taking part in Angola's civil war.

Even then, the idea of making common cause with a racist regime would have stirred wide disgust. Context makes the disclosure still more offensive. It is only one in a series of administration lunges in Central America that have traduced policies and principle. President Reagan has been so blindly ardent on Nicaragua that officials following his lead have on one occasion after another approved schemes that soured into national embarrassments:

The Argentine Connection, In its zeal to train a rebel force to oppose the Sandinists, the Reagan administration early obtained help from Argentina, then under the most ruthless military dictatorship in Latin America. Argentine officers worked with former Somoza National Guardsmen to train an exile force; this was the origin of the contras. When Mr. Reagan subsequently backed Britain in the Falkland war, the junta cried betrayal, believing it had earned at least U.S. neutrality. The World Court Debacie. What brought on the Boland amendment was the failure of William Casey, the CIA director, to inform Congress that the CIA was lawlessly mining Nicaraguan waters. When Managua appealed to the World Court, the Reagan administration hovcotted the tribunal - and shrugged off a nearunanimous finding in Nicaragua's favor.

Superpower as Beggar. Denied funds for the contras by Congress, the administration begged for contributions from Saudi Arabia and Brunei, agreeing to their condition that the aid remain secret. Their willingness to help the administration circumvent Congress bought them unhealthy leverage over U.S. policy. Elliott Abrams, the State Department fund-raiser, then lied to Congress about a solicitation he later characlerized as demeaning and humiliating.

The Iran Arms Diversion, Whatever the administration's original reason for trading arms for hostages, an additional reason soon blossomed: the chance to divert millions in arms sales profits to the contras. Once again, contra fever led the administration to do what it promised it would never do: deal with terrorists. Mr. Reagan has spent the last nine months struggling to recover his credibility.

It's not hard to see why South Africa could have been tempted to come to the aid of the contras. Doing so would have earned it reaffirmed support from Washington, apartheid or no apartheid. But could any administration official have thought for one minute that South African aid for the contras was worth pawning a part of America's soul?

Iranian minesweepers: it sounds like a contradiction in terms. But even though, by agreement of everyone but Iran, it is Iranianlaid mines that threaten Gulf navigation, Iranian minesweepers are now out there in international waters trying to pick up mines. Operating in units equipped and trained by the United States in the old days, they are the latest recruits to an international flotilla that includes the Americans, Soviets, British and French, with others perhaps to come.

This development goes beyond the factionalism or disarray or division of labor. whatever it is, that allows Iran to engage in mining and sweeping at the same time. Iran is coming to grant that no Gulf country has a greater interest than it does in free navigation. Unlike Iraq, Iran does not yet have pipelines to carry out the oil that finances its part of the Iran-Iraq war. Did Iran neglect this key fact for a while? In attack-ing the shipping of Iraq's allies, did it ignore that Americans and others might react by helping to keep sea-lanes open? That this new naval presence, while inhibiting Iraq from attacks on Iranian shipping, would also put foreign navies into waters that the Implians insist are theirs alone to control?

To control and to police. Iranian authorities, denying they laid the mines or command the boats that now endanger Gulf traffic, declare that they can perform whatever naval services are required and that the foreign ships can go home. To advertise this claim. they invited Western reporters aboard one of the minesweepers this week. Tehran's minesweepers are welcome: they should know just where to look for the mines. It is cheeky of Tehran, however, to expect the very Gulf states it menaces to entrust the protection of their shipping to Ayatollah Khomemi.

A better idea was offered the other day by President Reagan's national security adviser. Frank Carlucci. "If the danger recedes" to U.S.-flag vessels, he said, "the escorting" by the U.S. Navy "can stop." Iran, though it is strong on issuing general threats, does not acknowledge responsibility for specific shipping attacks, attributing them to an "invisible hand." But if it is serious in urging the U.S. Navy to leave the Gulf, it should want to test this commitment by a ranking official stating the simple condition on which the United States would end the naval operations that Iran finds so offensive.

aguay to yield power to civilian democrats. But in Haiti it supports Lieutenant General Henri Namphy's discredited junta as long as it adheres to its announced timetable and ground rules for transition to elected government. Going along with the military is a sensible course because Haiti simply doesn't have other functioning political institutions.

The elections now scheduled for November offer the only hope for a better alternative. Abandoning the junta undoubtedly would lead to postponement, at the very least, of the November vote. Paradoxically, an undemocratic junta thus seems democracy's best bet. Meanwhile the junta's record inspires scant confidence, and its commitment to a free and orderly election process cannot be taken for granted. It has squandered 18 months without producing any meaningful economic or political development. Haitians are still as poor and desperate

The Reagan administration rightly presses as they were when Jean-Claude Duvalier fled In June, the junta tried to supersede an independent electoral commission, backing down only under considerable popular and diplomatic pressure, Washington's included. Since, at least 40 civilians have died at the hands of soldiers or police. One victim was a presidential candidate. In response to popular protest, the military has been nothing but rigid. It has protected the jobs and fortunes of notorious Duvalierist thugs. These groups have an interest in provoking disorder in an attempt to derail the electoral process and keep their military protectors in power indefinitely. eaking the pledge to hold free elections would necessarily mean a break with the United States. Washington will have to keep a watchful eve and hope the elections provide an opening for genuine democrats to emerge. Sadly, there is no alternative.

The Nazi Legacy Will Linger

The death of Rudolf Hess in Spandau Prison brings to a close the story of the attempt at the Nuremburg trials to bring the leaders of the Third Reich to justice for their crimes committed in the name of the German people. Now that its last inmate is dead, Spandau may soon share the fate of the Chancellery and Hitler's villa at Berchtesgaden and be torn down to prevent it from becoming the object of a neo-Nazi cult. The physical monuments of the Third Reich are easy to destroy; far more difficult to expunge are the political and moral vestiges of the Nazi regime, the consequences which a divided Germany will continue to bear for a long time to come.

The Road Back to Damascus

The United States is returning its ambassador to Damascus, from where he was withdrawn last year following proof of Syrian complicity in terrorism. The decision marks another small step toward the rehabilitation of Syria in the West, and one reason commonly given for encouraging warmer rela-tions with President Hafez al-Assad is the influence he might have upon Tehran as the avatollahs' most important ally. So far there s little evidence to support this. The offer by Hasherni Rafsanjani, Speaker of the Iranian parliament, to use his best offices to secure the hostages' release likely owes as much to political infighting in Tehran as it does to outside intervention. Anyway, his warning that a reciprocal U.S. gesture is needed - pressure on Israel and Kuwan to release terrorists - makes such a deal unthinkable. So the real reason that relations with Svria cannot be rejected is that Mr. Assad is the only conduit of even half-reliable information on the hostages. This conduit must be explored, which is why there is an argument for the return of the U.S. ambassador to Damascas. But nothing more than is necessary for that purpose should be considered.

Against Iran, Patience Is the Only Weapon

WASHINGTON — Whoever comes to power in Iran after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini will encounter severe problems. Iran faces enormous economic difficulties; no credit on world markets an oil industry ravaged by mismanagement and the Gulf war, and factory output that stands at a fraction of what it was under the shah. Politically, Kurdish insurgents continue attacks in their decades-old fight for independence; similar turmoil is on the rise in Baluchistan, and 1.5 million to 2 million Afghani refugees have flooded into Iran, some of whom, it can be assumed, are Soviet agents.

But along with all the problems, Ayatollah Khomeini will leave legacies of strength. The first is the ideological makeup of the populace. Many people have been killed in the war, left the country or been the victims of political repression. But one statistic rings out as crucial: 45 percent of all Iranians are now under 16 years old -an ideologically malleable group that assures the revolution a near majorits of devout followers into the long-term future. The second legacy is fierce independence. From World War II until the 1979 revolution, Iranians had believed that foreign powers controlled their desuny. This inferiority complex was especially intense regarding the United States, which did in fact hold great sway over internal Iranian affairs. (It was the United States that, in 1953, helped bring back the shah by orchestrating a coup that overthrew the militantly nationalist prime minister. Mohammed Mossadegh). This psychology has been starkly reversed under Ayatollah Khomeini, and most Iranians—a people generally suscepti-ble to conspiracy theories—now consider Iran's destiny to be in Iranian hands. Finally, Iran under Ayatollah Khomeini has become a martial state. Opposition to the war exists, but it cannot mask the reality of a new and aggressive military spirit. The last time Iran had fought a war was in 1826 against Russia — a war that Iran lost. Since, many Iranians had assumed the country had no taste or talent for war. But with the successful defense of Iranian territory against the Iraqi invasion, Iran has emerged as a country with not only fighting capabilities (which it had under the shah) but the will to use them. Combined with its population and industrial-military potential, Iran will be a regional military force far into the future.

For the United States, now escalating its military presence in the Gulf, the implications of Iran's new-found warlike nature are profound — espe-cially when contrasted with the continuing U.S. qualms about using military force. Compare the most recent Iranian and American experiences with war. In the last eight years, Iran has lost hundreds of thousands of people in its conflict with Iraq, and it shows few signs that it will stop. Entire towns have been erased from the map in Khuzistan, waves of young Iranians have gone to their deaths with the promise of martyrdom, Iranian forces have been the targets of chemical weapons and Iraqi missiles have struck inside Tehran.

What is the United States willing to do to further ounish such a country? How far is it willing to go? Disenchantment with the Vietnam War was based not only on American casualties and confusion as to why the United States was there but on a profound discomfort with the killing and destruc-tion that U.S. military power had caused. Recall, too, the concern of the American populace when there were civilian casualties in Grensda, and when Colonel Moammar Gadhafi's daughter was killed in the air attack on Libya.

Now the Reagan administration has a list of potential Iranian targets for retaliation, targets reportedly chosen with an eye toward a minimal loss of life, either American or Iranian — "surgical strikes" that would entail little sacrifice, that

 Second, it should maintain only a low-key presence in the Gulf. Given the military constant noted above, a military showdown not only would be useless as a coercive measure, it would further isolate Iran, enhance the regime's aggressive nature and even possibly force Iran into the Soviet camp.

This is not to say that the United States will never be forced to take a military stand against Iran. But that time has not come; the circumstances do not exist to warrant paying the high price of a military showdown. U.S. policy makers must realize that, even though dialogue or con-structive relations with Iran are exceedingly difficult if not impossible, confrontation is not an acceptable alternative. A policy of patience and neutrality may be politically impalatable for the Reagan administration and its successor, but it is Reagan administration and its successor, but the best path for the United States to follow.

The Gamble For Peace Is

By A.M. Rosenthal

N EW YORK -Let's stand back a minute and see what is happening to the peace proposals for Micaragua before they are killed by a fascinating combination of American litical lives to supporting him.

The pro-Sandinists in press and politics are contemptuous of the goal of political democracy in Nicarasua, none of our business, they say. They are more interested in continuation of Sandinist rule than in peace. There are Democrats who reject moves toward peace by the White House principally out of distrust and contempt for the president. And some Republicans see any negotiations short of a total Sandinist surrender as a shameful sellour. Standing back: The speaker of the House of Representatives, Jim Wright, a Democrat, after being approached by the White House offered a set of proposals for a cease-fire, suspension of U.S. military aid to the contras and Soviet aid to the Sandinists. Secretary of State George Shultz and Howard Baker, the White House chief of staff, believing the Sandinists had been hurt severely enough to make negotiations feasible, got Mr. Reagan to agree.

Meanwhile, down in Guatemala, the presidents of Central America dethe presidents of Central America the cided to sign their own peace proposals before the Reagan-Wright plan took the whole show away. So far, fine. Two sets of proposals, with important differences but, perhaps, bridgeable. But Washington, faced with possible success, went haywire. The administration and Mr. Wright acted as if the Gustemala plan was the only one on the table. This astonished everyone, including the Central American presidents, who fully expected that the two plans would be negotiated out. For instance, the Guatemala proposals do not cut back Soviet aid to Nicinagna. The Central Americans think this is something the United States ought to take up forcefully with the Russians, not an outrespons idea. ians, not an outrageous idea. Soon enough, Washington was entering a few reservations to the Guateinals plan, appropriately. For instance, aid to the contras would cause a couple of months before the ceasea couple of months period vide allows.

Some State Department people were blasphemous enough to suggest that Congress should put money in escrow for the contras in case the Sandinists. tried democracy and decided they didn't like it after all. The pro-Sandinists in this country acted as if it were a dammable sin to suggest that the United States should not immediately destroy the contras, whose existence brought the denial of military supplies to Iran—should be given new life as both official and actual U.S. policy. In about the opportunity for negotiations.

As for the Sandinists, they are putting police dogs on the opposition and muttering that if the world does not give them more of they may not go in for denicoracy after all. No surprise; no sensible believer in political freedom would base negotiations on conversion of Sandinists to democracy.

This is where we are: The United against Iranian targets if other mines: States can decide that it will not con-explode. Having lowered the intensi-sider scrious negotiations and instead explode. Having lowered the intensity of the conflict, the United States was for the contras to wipe out the Sandinists and hold a victory parade in Managora. One famous expert on contrast has said publicly that this would not happen: Oliver North.

Or it can decide that one day the Sandimists, because of a collapsing death. Then the United States might comonny, contra pressure and internal be in a position to pursue better relationaries, will be ready to agree to prounrest, will be ready to agree to proposals that would open Nicaraguan politics to representatives of the opposition, including contras, free the press and other prisoners and create the conditions for a real election.

There are officials in Washington who feel that the time is not yet that another year of fighting is necessary. That would mean another year of Nicaraguan deaths that might be avoided if real talks started now.

But trust in Sandinists, who have worked desperately to turn Nicaraguan into a Communication of the second of

U.S. Studying Boycott On Iranian Oil Imports

By Neil A. Lewis New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration is studying whether to impose a poycott of oil trade with Iran, a trade that is understood to be far greater than previously thought, U.S. officials said. But other senior officials said they were skeptical as to whether a boycott would be effective. Oil accounts for three-fourths of Iran's $612 million of annual imports into the United States, according to public figures. But officials say that these figures significantly underestimate the oil trade because they cover only direct imports of Iranian crude.

Large additional amounts of Iranian oil come to the United States, officials said, after being refined in the Virgin Islands by the Amerada Hess Corp. and by other smaller companies elsewhere in the Caribhean. There is nothing illegal about these imports, but some officialshave become concerned because the amount of these refined prodgo could also create legal problems ucts has sharply increased in the because of the agreement between last several months.

Continuing labor unrest could have an impact "on the everyday life of each and every citizen," Mr. Chun said and he called for restraint

Mr. Chun's labor minister, Lee Hun Ki, mediated Thursday to avert a strike by 18,000 municipal bus drivers in Seoul. Private bus companies agreed to an 11-percent raise, giving drivers an average monthly income of $565, after drivers flooded union offices with angry telephone calls at reports of a 10-percent settlement.

But on Friday in Inchon, a walkout by drivers shut down the city's 753 buses after contract negotiations broke down.

Strikes continued at hundreds of other firms. Daewoo Shipbuilding and Machinery Co., part of a large conglomerate, closed its shipyard after several days of labor disputes. Workers at Bayer Pharma Korea Ltd., a joint venture with Bayer of West Germany, demanded a 20percent wage increase and the dismissal of three out of four "highly paid" West German vice presidents, according to The Korea Herald newspaper.

During his news conference at the presidential Blue House, Mr. Chun said that when he retires he hopes to travel, spend more time with his family and "without fail" write his memoirs, which he said "might be helpful to the next president and to the nation."

Gems Turning In a Sparkling Performance

International Herald Tribune

N EW YORK —The art market is driven by two forces, fashions, rooted in taste, and the eagerness to buy, which reflects an easy cash flow. Here, the soundest indicator is the precious-stones market. where prices are determined by the quality of the raw material, not civie or hardly so.

And regarding stones, eagerness has never been so easily stirred as has just been demonstrated. On Aug. 7. The New York Times reported that a pear-shaped diamond weighing 64.83 carats and classified as D flawless, the top, was coming up at Christie's on Oct. 20. Since then, phone calls have been pouring in. True, this is the biggest D flawless diamond ever seen at auction. François Curiel, an executive vice president of Christie's North America, says that he has never seen anything like it - nor like the response it has generated. There have been 15 serious inquiries of which two are flawlessly serious. He expects the stone to sell in the area of $7 million or roughly $100,000 per carat. The Christie's expert sees the current excitement as a logical sequel to the metamorphosis undergone by the gem market last season.

This compares with $94 million in the previous season. According to Curiel's calculations, New York accounts for $89 million, London for $13 million, Geneva for $98 million, which includes the $50 million spent on the Duchess of Windsor's jewels at Sotheby's on April 5 and 6. Minor sales account for the remaining $5

This sale was an event of enormous magnitude. The organization of the logistics, the deft handling of the media by Sotheby's press office and the superb performance of Nicholas Rayner as an auctioneer were important factors in the stunning outcome. Yet, looking at it in retrospect, many professionals say things could not have gone differently. Had the sale taken place a year earlier, it would not have done nearly as well. There is a new climate, and dealers played a major role as boosters at the top end of the market. Professionals cite several instances.

Take one of the sensations of the Windsor sale, the 19.77 carat emerald sold for $2,167,000. This was the first time that an emerald had topped the $1 million mark. The previous record had been set in November 1979 at Christie's in Geneva, by a 12.64 carat gem sold for "only" $670,000. Yet the buyer of the $2.16 million emerald was no greenhorn impressed by the Wind-profession, worldwide. Further proof that prices of that order were not just the conse-quence of the Windsor mirage came in New York in the same month. On April 17, Sotheby's sold

The problem of protecting important documents in places where scholars are welcome is nationwide. Manuscripts, prints and drawings have soared in value in recent years. houses for thousands of dollars. But it is not only the chance to make money that leads to theft by real or fraudulent scholars. According to library authorities, it is also the idea of secretly possessing a historic letter that can be a strong temptation.

The director of special collections in the library of the University of California at Los Angeles, David Zeidberg, has been studying the problem. He serves as chairman of a committee of the Association of College and Research Librarians that is dealing with the security of rure books and manuscripts. "We've written new guidelines to prevent theirs and also model legislation for states," Zeidberg said, "But we need stiffer laws against library thieves. "One of the big flaws is that such thefts are and other institutions with rare books and

Zeidberg said that another problem militating against effective security was the attitude of some library officials:

"A lot of these thefts are swept under the rug," he said. "There is some fear that trustees or donors or the public might hesitate to help a library if they thought security was weak."

Among the preventive measures proposed by the Association of College and Research Librarians are these:

Nancy Bush of the Library of Congress's public affairs office said the library was "a very secure place, but we are looking again at the security situation." The reading room there is constantly monitored. "We have 10,000 user days a year - that's a lot of use - so weconsider ours a good record in safeguarding our materials," Bush said.

From Autos to Soup Cans, A Bar Code Makes Its Mark

By PHILIP E. ROSS

ETROIT — The bar codes designed to hurry groceries through checkout lanes are now being applied to parts on car assembly lines, allowing automakers and suppliers to cut costs by managing their inventories more tightly. The thick and thin, black-and-white lines on soup cans, cereal boxes and most supermarket products can be read by a iaser scanner, sometimes mounted on the counter.

In a grocery store, a sale is recorded and the computerized inventory is updated as soon as the code passes before the scanner. Supermarkets pioneered the technology because they had the most to gain. Profit margins are so low in that business that the motivation to save is higher," said Ram Rachamadugu, an industrial management expert at the University of Michigan's business school. "Even when the states mandated stamping the price on products, bar coding was still useful for accuraget the benefit. cy and inventory control." U.S. automakers became interested in bar coding in the early 1980s, a decade after the grocery industry had adopted the uniform product code for its bar labels. The lag largely reflected a feeling in Detroit that its competitive position was secure. But faced with increased competition from overseas and the oil shocks of the 1970s, the industry began to pay more attention to cost cutting and efficiency.

codes while customers

Bar codes are now imposed from the top: Automakers require them of suppliers, and many suppliers require them of their suppliers. The effect has been to advance both plant automation and the Japanese manufacturing technique called "just-in-time," in which parts are shipped only as they are needed.

In 1981, 12 of the largest North American automakers and suppliers formed the Automotive Industry Action Group to establish standards for bar codes and to cajole smaller suppliers into accepting the technology.
Still, some automotive suppliers have been rejuctant to accept bar coding. They feel they are being asked to bear the cost of the bar codes while the benefit goes almost wholly to the customers.

AT THE Detroit stamping plant of Budd Co., a major automotive parts supplier, I. Richard Schmitt, a materials and inventory supervisor, said that bar coding had so far saved money for customers but not for Budd. "It hasn't really done anything for reducing our inventory," said Mr. Schmitt, who is helping introduce bar coding at Budd.

"Die transitions, for example, are no faster."

Die transitions, during which the molds against which metal parts are stamped are changed, are often the bottlenecks in a factory's assembly line. Richard Kalin, an assembly clerk at Budd's plant, recently demonstrated how he would label a crate of parts ready for a shipment: "I'm asking for a GT door," he said, entering its name, destination and other specifications on a keyboard.

Moments later, the computer printer spewed out a three-part panel of labels noting the part, the quantity — there were 12 doors in a crate — the customer and the date. One panel was a receipt for internal accounting, the second was for the customer and the third was a tag for the crate.

"We'll start using bar coding internally in the next 18 months," Mr. Schmitt said. "We don't want to jump in before the technology is proved." Budd has thus far invested $31,000 in bar coding Because bar coding saves money for customers, and as most suppliers are themselves customers, they can expect to benefit as the process permeates the auto industry.

But there are limitations. Bar codes cannot easily be used on tiny parts such as an an electronic component. Nor do they work in wet, corrosive or otherwise hostile environments.

ed. "I remember being surprised to see titles like 'Lusty Ladies No. 3, and being told not to use our real return address."

A Hollywood resident who aspires to a role in a television comedy, Mr. Zimmerman is serving as a receptionist for California Federal Savings & Loan Association, where he gets to use his newly acquired word-processing skills. But tomorrow, who knows?

Mr. Zimmerman, 29, is one of a growing army of "temps," people who earn their income through temporary stints of work at various companies rather than joining the permanent payroll of a single employer.

The temporary personnel in-dustry is booming as employers seek to keep their company costs low. Increasingly, managers are discovering that one way to cut costs and avoid the agony of lay-offs when times are tough is to take on extra workers only for limited periods.

Moreover, the companies that supply temporary help have ben-ctited from a seemingly inex-haustible demand for workers who are up-to-date in modern office technology. As Mr. Zimmerman's own experience shows, however, temps perform a wide range of tasks. "We had a request once where they wanted people to sniff air out of bags," said Marjorie A. Bartok, a Los Angeles area manager with Manpower Inc., the world's largest supplier of tempo-rary personnel. Concerned about safety, Manpower turned down the order, which was from a pollution-control company.

Manpower, Arrow to Merge

MILWAUKEE - Manpower Inc., the world's largest temporary services company, said Friday that it had approved an offer from Blue Arrow PLC of Britain to merge in a $1.33 billion deal.

Manpower's board accepted a sweetened offer of $82.50 for each of its 16.1 million shares outstanding at a special board meeting. It had rejected a previous bid from Blue Arrow valued at 1.2 billion or $75

Blue Arrow is the biggest employment agency in Britain, but is much smaller than Manpower, which operates 1,400 offices internationally. Manpower had said its management would support the new bid shortly after Blue Arrow unveiled the proposal Friday. Manpower's share price closed $3.75 higher at $81.75 in active trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Adia SA, the Swiss company that operates the world's second-biggest employment agency, said earlier that it had decided against a ness arrangement with Manpower to thwart the takeover.

Manpower said Thursday in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that a group of shareholders had filed a class action suit, contending that its management breached its fiduciary duties by impeding Blue Arrow's first takeover attempt.

Manpower, based in Milwaukee, is a tempting target indeed: It owns or licenses close to 1,400 offices in 34 countries. Its revenue jumped 35 percent to $1.2 billion for the fiscal year ended

Yet it is only the most visible company in an industry whose not keep up with demand for 1986 payroll in the United States workers, which has quadrupled exceeded $7 billion. From its since 1970 and has grown at rates

Companies use temporary help to replace workers on vacation, to help on special projects, to cover a vacancy during the search for a permanent worker and for seasonal increases in their workload. More and more, the basic goal is the same: to avoid being unnecessarily overstaffed with permanent, full-time people. Each time a company places an order for a temporary employee, an arrangement begins that dif-fers radically from the employeremployee relationship that most people are used to.

Say an advertising agency needs a typist. The placement company sends a person, and the advertising agency provides the supervision.
Yet the placement company remains the legal employer, whether the job lasts one day or several months. It pays the workers at rates that, according to such com-panies, are "competitive," and handles all state and federal tax withholding.

In return for such services, the advertising agency reimburses the personnel concern at an amount that is substantially greater than the worker's pay.

The temporary companies pre-fer not to reveal how much they they charge a client company for worker who receives $8 an hour, for example. But according to one industry executive, the mark-up can amount to 40 percent to 50

Increasingly, the sort of workers requested are those undaunted by modern office technology, including word processors and computers. ### Reversing Trend, Canadians Become Major Investors in U.S.

By Herbert H. Denton Washington Past Service

What has been largely unnoticed here is the extent to which Canadian companies have become key players among the foreign investors descending on the United States.

Canadian companies now employ more than 527,000 Americans, more than double the number employed by U.S. affiliates of Japanese companies and second only to the labor force of British-owned

The United States is a very large market and we'd like to be a part of it," he said. Alan M. Rugman, an economist at the University of Toronto, contended in a recent study that if trends continue, the level of direct Canadian investment in the United States could equal U.S. investment in Canada in five years.

Mr. Rugman's study, for the Toronto-based C.D. Howe Institute research organization, charts a reversal in investment flows between Canada and the United States over the past decade.

In 1975, Canadian companies had only about $5.5 billion invested in the United States, about onelifth of the amount U.S. companies had invested in Canada, By 1985, Canadian investment in the United States had risen to about $27 bilthe economies of scale they need to lion, which was about three-fifths merce Department analysts attributed the trend to several factors. First, there was some disinvestment by U.S. firms after Canadian governments adopted stringent policies in the 1970s to curb foreign investment, particularly in the en-

when he came to power three years ago, although he retained barriers to U.S. takeover of Canadian companies regarded as "sensitive cultural industries," such as newspapers, magazines, television stations

A second factor appears to be that government protection of Canadian businesses and weak antitrust laws have allowed some of those companies to grow huge. A Quebec economist, Jacques Parizeau, said, "Behind this protective wall, a massive concentration of economic and financial power was taking place in Canada.

"The process of concentration inevitably led to an overflow of Canadian investment abroad. Most of it went to the United States." There are also generous tax advantages to operating in both counuries.

Mr. Rugman described in his study a complex but legal arrange-ment known as "the double dip." It involves moving corporate borrowings on a long rouse to the United States by way of a financial subsidiary in an offshore tax haven.

Dow Edges Up to Set Record

NEW YORK - The Dow Jones industrial iverage set its 54th record of the year Friday. inding a volatile week with only a slight gain in ective trading

The broader market was almost unchanged from Thursday because of continued weakness in the dollar, which kept investors cautious.
The Dow, which dropped 46 points on Tuesday only to rebound 41 points on Thursday, closed Friday up 2.71 to 2.709.50. It was the third record of the control of the contro third record of the week.

The Dow had been up as much as 11 points in early Friday trading.

Advancing issues just barely outnumbered declines among the 2.013 issues traded. Volume eased to about 191 million shares from the 196.5

million traded Thursday. In addition to the Dow, broader market indexes broke day-old records. The New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.47 to 187.51 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index added 1.06 to 335.90. The price of an average share rose 10

Reflecting strength in over-the-counter is-sues, the National Association of Securities Dealers composite index rose 2.44 to a record

"We were in a holding pattern today," said Hildegard Zagorski, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities, "The dollar threw a latte roadblock in the way of the charging bull."

What we learned this week," she said, "is that the dollar is the wild card. We don't necessarily need a rising dollar, but we do need a stable dollar for the market to keep surging." investors demonstrated their sensitivity to currency, in a delayed reaction to the report last Friday of a bulging trade deficit, tumbled and Wail Street feared a lower dollar would discourage foreign investment in U.S. stocks.

"Institutions are still heavy with eash and they appear comfortable putting it to work in stocks," said Thomas Ryan of Kidder Peabody. He also said that there has been no indication that foreign investment has abated this week even though the dollar has fallen about ten yen since the release of the trade figures a week ago.

Mr. Ryan said that the slight rise in the Dow on Friday was almost entirely due to the sharp. rise in Phillip Morris, one of the 30 industrials

Shares of tobacco stocks rose sharply after the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th District in Atlanta ruled in favor of American Brands in a closely-watched case that could have an impact on future liability cases against tobacco companies, traders and analysts said.

The court said that the company can use federal rigarette labeling laws as a defense against suits that claim its eigerette products caused the death of a smoker. Shares of American Brands rose 2% to 55%

Philip Morris climbed 4% to 111% and RIR labisco 3 to 6415. Smithkline Beckman Corp [ell 5% to 65%

after Bolar Pharmaceutical said it received Food and Drug Administration approval to produce the generic equivalent of Smithkline's Dyazide drug, traders and analysts said. Dyazide is Smithkline's second-biggest selling drug. It is a diuretic and an anti-hypertensive drug that contributes about $300 million in sales to Smithkline.

Pentagon Drops AmEx Contract

WASHINGTON - The Pentagon said Friday it would not renew a contract with American Express Co. to pro-vide banking services to U.S. military personnel stationed in West Germany, Greece and the Netherlands.

The department said that a two-year contract had been awarded after competitive bid-ding to Merchants National Corp. of Indianapolis, which will operate 134 bank facilities for the U.S. military in those countries. The value of the con tract was not disclosed.

The Pentagon said it was the first time in the postwar period that the American Express would not be involved in U.S.

Hill Samuel Picks Expert

LONDON - Hill Samuel Group PLC said Friday it had named David Davies, the former managing director of Hongkong Land Co. Ltd., as executive vice chairman and chief executive.

Mr. Davies, 47, replaces Christo-pher N. Castleman, who resigned in protest as chief executive last month when the merchant bank opened merger talks with Union Bank of Switzerland. The talks were called off earlier this week.

Mr. Davies, who was appointed a nonexecutive director at Hill Samuel last fall, worked at the merchant bank from 1967 to 1973, then with MEPC PLC, a British developer, until 1983. He was managing director of HongKong Land until ast year.

In a separate development, Hill Samuel said Thursday that two large shareholders had marginally increased their stakes.

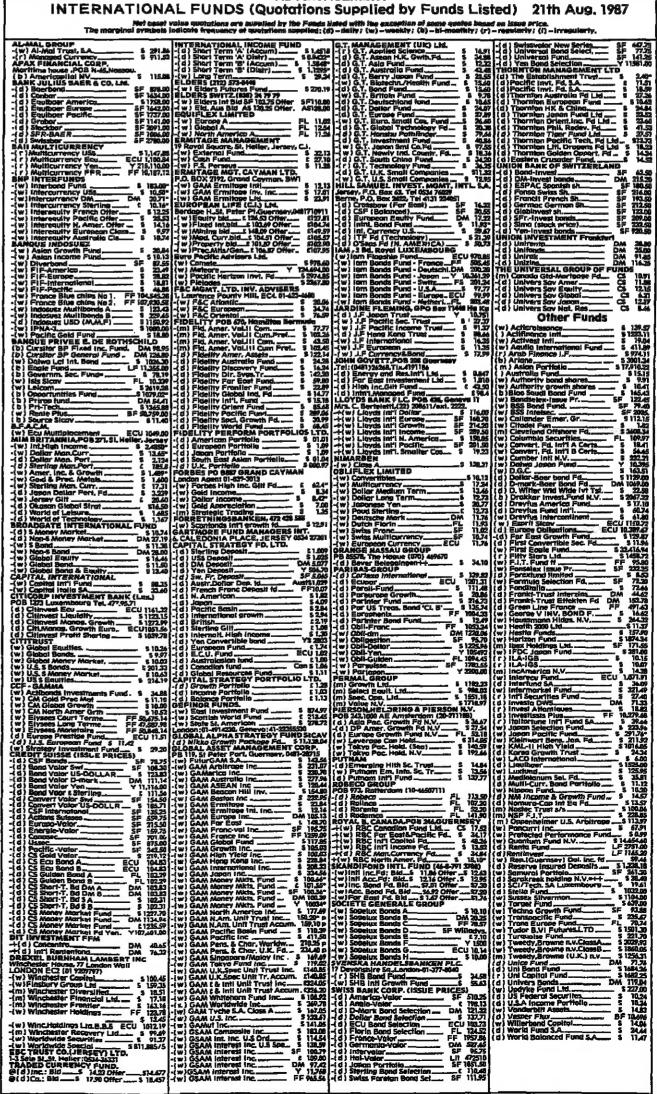

FAI Insurances Ltd. of Australia raised its stake to 14.3 percent from 14 percent. Consolidated Press International (Netherlands Antilles) NV, which is controlled by the Australian businessman Kerry Packer, raised its stake to 12.6 per-cent from 12 percent.

Name Change Sought By Allegheny Beverage

CHEVERLY, Maryland - Allegheny Beverage Corp. said Friday that it has proposed changing its name to Alleco inc. in a proxy statement mailed to stockholders.

The proxy, Allegheny said, also solicits approval for the previously announced sale of Service America Corp., the company's sole remain-ing subsidiary. The company said that if the sale is supported, the management will ask the board of directors to declare a cash dividend tillion shares with a nominal value an extraordinary general meeting military banking in these coun of 300 francs (about $49) each. Suez is France's sixth-largest said. of $1.20 per share. ADVERTISEMENT

Reports Targets

Fed Panel

NEW YORK - The Federal Open Market Committee, the Federal Reserve policy-making panel. voted at its July 7 meeting to maintain the existing degree of reserve restraint, minutes released Friday

The committee set a 5 percent June to September growth target for M-2 and one of 7½ percent for M-3, with no target for M-1. At its prior meeting on May 19, the committee set a target of around 6 per-cent or less for both M-2 and M-3 for the March to June period, without an M-1 goal.

M-1 is a measure of money supply growth that includes currency in circulation, traveler's checks and checking deposits at financial insti-

M-2 includes M-1 plus savings and small time deposits, most mon-ey market mutual fund shares and other items. M-3, the broadest aggregate, includes M-2, large time deposits and other items.

At its July meeting, the committee maintained the 4 percent to 8 percent federal funds rate reference range in place at the prior meeting.

In its policy directive, the July panel members said "somewhat greater reserve restraint or somewhat lesser reserve restraint would be acceptable depending on indications of inflationary pressures and on developments in foreign exchange markets, as well as the behavior of the aggregates and the strength of the business expancommonly used software packages And it has set up a toll-free hot line tough and management is looking

"But if a temporary company sends you, and I decide I don't like the way you do word-processing you're gone -and it's no big deal."

Nonetheless, the trade-off of fewer benefits for flexibility is one that many temporaries are willing to make with enthusiasm. "It gives me the flexibility to say, 'I've got three auditions coming up next week, so I choose not to work next week," Mr. Zimmerman said.

The temporary personnel comvanies increasingly are offering benefit packages that include health insurance and vacation time But the majority of workers, many whom register with several different companies, typically do not accumulate enough hours with any single company to qualify.

An Oral History of the Vietnam War By Kim Willenson with the correspondents of

I N Studs Terkel's pioneering oral history of World War II. " The Good War," the author placed quotation marks around the title. He explained in a prefatory note that he added them "not as a matter of caprice or editorial comment, but simply because the adjective 'good' mated to the noun 'war' is so incongruous.

By contrast, in "The Bad War: An Oral History of the Vietnam War" - written by Kim Willenson with the correspondents of Newsweek - no quotation marks are added to the title. The reason for omitting any such ironic qualifying touch is also not capricious. The dedication by Willenson, the book's editor, helps to explain why: "To the names on the Wall" monument in Washington "and all the other

Looking back on the longest war in American history — longer than both world wars combined none of the contributors now see much light at the end of the tunnel. Nevertheless. "The Bad War" is a balanced work. More than 75 hawks and doves, including former grunts in the jungles of Vietnam as well as survivors of the street battles in the United States, open up in this opinionated and, in some places, surprisingly eloquent book. The Vicinam syndrome — fear of getting bogged down in the Big Muddy of war again — occupies the attention of a number of the commentators here. J. William Fulbright, who practices law in Washington, was chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee when President Lyndon B. Johnson escalated the war in Southeast Asia. In an interview with Willenson last year. Fulbright said: "Look, it's very unpleasant to even talk about" Vietnam. "It has no significance any more. The country didn't

All the interviews in "The Bad War" were conducted in 1985 and 1986 by various Newsweek correspondents, before the fran-contra hearings, but they still hold up. This oral history records voices from Joan Baez to Gary Hart, from the former premier of South Vietnam, Nguyen Cao Ky. to Eugene McCarthy, from Caspar Weinberger to Major General George S. Patton 3d, retired, son of the famed World War II general. Patton criticizes the lack of strategic direction and national support during the war and bitterly declares: "We were defeated by an eighth-rate power." But not even the military-minded Patton, who says he cried at the final loss of Vietnam, finds much good in "The Bad War."

THE latest addition to the Greek navy, swoop-L ing like a stately nautical centipede across the Bay of Phaleron near Athens, is a 45-ton warship of the kind that once ruled the seas and profoundly influenced the development of the modern world.

The ship is a replica, as exact as science, scholarship and inspired guesswork can make it, of a 170oar trireme from the heyday of Athenian power in the fifth century R.C., the first to be built for perhaps 2,000 years.

In the presence of Andreas Papandreou, the prime minister. Melina Mercouri, the culture minster and other civilian and military dignitaries, the ship will be commissioned in the Hellenic navy Wednesday and then rowed along the coast to a mooring off the island of Kea so that the population of Athens can have a good look at it.

Until the commissioning, its name is by tradi-tion a military secret — although the betting is on Olympia, a name that graced triremes in the classical period, and that symbolizes Greece's present hope of hosting the 1996 Olympic Games. "It is so beautiful," Mercouri said in a telephone interview. " It represents Greece in all her glory." Until recently, no one had a clear idea of how a trireme performed or what it was like to ply one of its oars. These questions are of significance to anyone who wonders how a tiny city-state in distant history could have produced so many ideas that still influence the 20th century. The trireme was fundamental to Athens' greatness and to the development of its democracy.

That this one was built is partly due to John Coates's tennis elbow. Laid up for six months with that affliction in 1979, Coates turned from his usual job of helping to design destroyers for the British Royal Navy to pondering how the trireme worked. In doing so, he studied a book by John Morrison, a professor of classics, about Greek gared ships.

In 1941. Morrison put forward the theory, derided by many other scholars at the time, that the oursmen on a trireme were arranged on three levels with oars of the same length, about six meters (19 fcet). Other theories were that the rowers were on the same level, or that there were three men to each

Coates deduced that Morrison was right. Putting together all the evidence, he said in a tele-phone interview from Athens, "I found there was only one possible design," and only Morrison's theory fitted all the known facts about triremes. Just as modern weapons tend to look alike according to their function, he said, the trireme had to be built in a certain way according to its function of ramming enemy ships at high speed with its semi-submerged bronze beak. Many scraps of evidence went into Coates's design. He knew the size the ship had to be about 37 meters long by 5.5 wide - from the dimensions of boat sheds excavated near Athens. Because the upkeep of the triremes was privately financed by wealthy Athenians as part of their "liturgia" or public service obligations, detailed inventories exist. Inscriptions from ancient naval dockyards provided a virtual shopping list of the materials needed to build a trireme. Thucydides, Xenophon and other classical authors gave information about the trireme's performance. Thucydides told how the crew of one trireme, sustained by barley dipped in oil and wine, averted a massacre by rowing the 184 nauti-cal miles from Athens to Mytilene in 24 hours, an average speed of more than 7 1/2 knots. Ramming speeds were much higher than that.

Finally, recent underwater discoveries of sunker Greek merchant ships, and particularly of a long ship off the coast of Sicily, gave Coates a good idea of the construction methods employed.

Coates got in touch with Morrison to cooperate on the design of a trireme at what he called "the dilettante level, as a hobby for a couple of retired gentlemen." Later a writer and former banker, Frank Welsh, offered to sponsor the building of a trireme and Coates started drawing detailed plans.

The plans were shown at a symposium in London in April, 1983, at which point the Greek government became interested. After a model of a section of the ship was successfully tested on the Thames, it was agreed the trireme would be built for the Greek navy at Piraeus, from where the Athenians set off on their ancient naval battles. It was built in two years at the shipyard of Dmitrios Tzakakos at a cost of 80 million drachmas (about $560,000). "That's expensive, but she is so beautiful," said Commander Nikos Gogos, a spokesman for the navy.

Coates, Morrison and Welsh watched proudly as a team of British university and club rowers pr the trireme through its sea trials off the island of Poros earlier this month. "The Greek navy has been marvelous in paying John Coates and me the compliment of believing what we said," Morrison said in a telephone interview. "It does look as if we put it together right."

Coates said the Trireme "maneuvers rather better than expected. She steers beautifully." The oars were deliberately made on the heavy side to prevent breakage during the inevitable tangles. And the British crew was not well matched in terms of weight and size. Nevertheless they managed to raise seven knots for a few minutes during the trials. "With lighter oars and a properly graded crew, nine knots is in sight," Coates said.

Using sails, the trireme was able to reach at a respectable 5 knots in a 15-knot wind. In ancient times, the sails were used on passage when the wind served, but not in battle.

Getting 170 people, each with less legroom than passenger on the average charter aircraft, to pull together in faultless precision was a lesson in human relations and a clue to what made the ancient Athenians the kind of people they were.

"Our preliminary experiences have shown that it would have been crazy to try to man one of these things with any crew that didn't want to be aboard." Coates said.

The fact that Athenian triremes were rowed by free citizens, not slaves or mercenaries, is a clue to the nature of Athenian democracy in the fifth century B.C.

According to a writer of the period, known to historians as the Old Oligarch, it was appropriate in Athens that "the poor and the common people should seem to have more power than the noble and rich, because it is this class that provides the rowers for the fleet and on which the power of the city is based."

The importance of the fleet shifted power away from the propertied yeomen who provided the hoplites, or heavily armed soldiers, and toward the garlio-chewing "sailor rabble" in the city who

With help from Corinth, the Athenian fleet smashed Xerxes and his horde at Salamis in 480 B.C., removed the threat of Persian invasion, and opened the way to Athens' golden age, but also to an age of fighting among the Greeks.

Naval supremacy gave the Athenians an empire, a confidence and a cosmopolitanism never seen before. Most Greeks, said the Old Oligarch, were insular "whereas the culture of Athens is a medley of elements drawn from all parts of the Greek world and even from the Barbarians."

Commodore Apostolos Vassiliadis of the Greek Navy said it is hoped to take the trireme to other countries as an evocation of that age. Beyond using the vessel to further historical research, the navy has made no firm plans for its latest acquisition. Greek team of oarsmen drawn from rowing clubs is in training to man the ship, which will be commanded by a naval officer, Lieutenant Dmitrics Papadas. Asked if other navies would be welcome to send crews to row the trireme. Vassiliadis replied, "Why not?"

Later this month, scholars from around the world will meet at Delphi for a conference on ship construction in history, and the experience gained from building and rowing the trireme is likely to be a major topic of discussion.

Coates said an enormous amount can potentially be learned about battles and naval tactics of the past by studying the performance of the trireme. The Athenians avoided close quarters combat and instead used a combination of speed and complicated maneuvers to defeat their enemies.

But the Athenians ignored the advice of their reatest statesman, Pericles, by becoming involved in a land war far from home. In 413, the Athenian fleet was destroyed by a combined Syracusan and Spartan force in the harbor at Syracuse in Sicily.

The Athenian sailors and ships were out of condition after a long siege. They were blocked in a narrow harbor where they could not employ their swooping tactics. The Syracusans reinforced their ships and charged prow first into the Athenian

Sparta destroyed the Greek fleet at Aegospotami and what little remained of Athenian democracy in 405 B.C. The sound of wailing arose all over Athens, said Xenophon, because the Athenians "thought that they themselves would now be dealt with as they had dealt with others." It was, effectively, the end of the age of the democratically-
